Sounds easy right? Let's look into a real use case

I own a local bakery in Böblingen Germany.
I want to hire a hard-working refugee.

Mr. Bäker Müller

This site seems promising,
although I don't know what IBM Bluemix is,
it just sounds cool!

I hit this button  and searched if anyone is looking for a baker's job, and I didn't find any.
So I'm going to create an offer.

I can manage my own profile and let people know more about me.

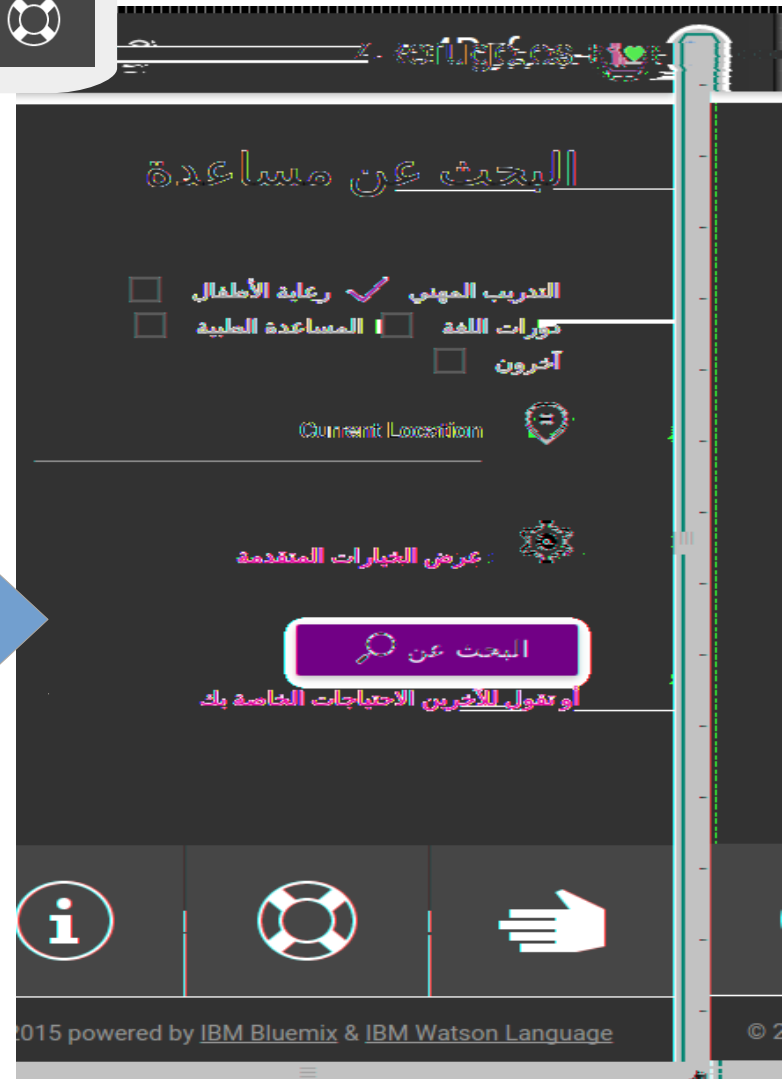

I was a baker in Syria and look for a similar job in my new home. But I don't know too much English. A friend recommended me this site that can be personalized for Arabic speakers.

I hit this button

Find help

Then I hit this search button.
I found offers in my neighbourhood. My friend said IBM Watson translates offers from English to Arabic in real-time.

Mr. Müller offered a baker's apprenticeship just 2 km from here.

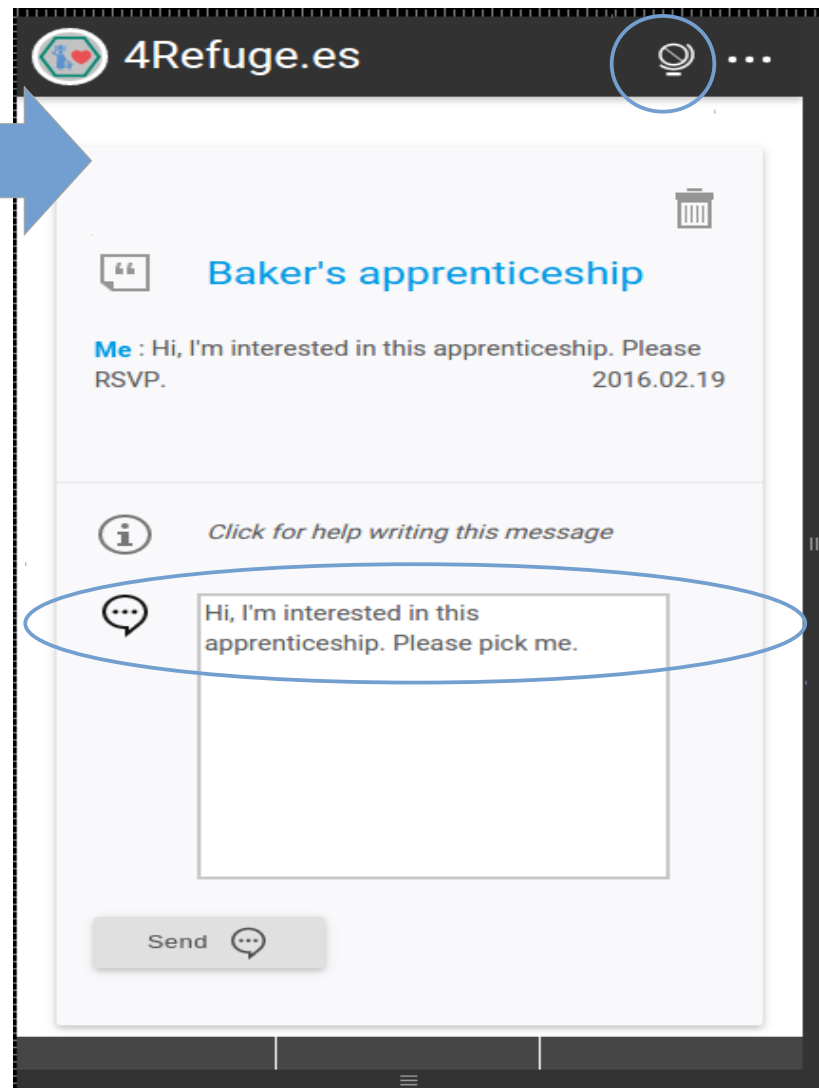

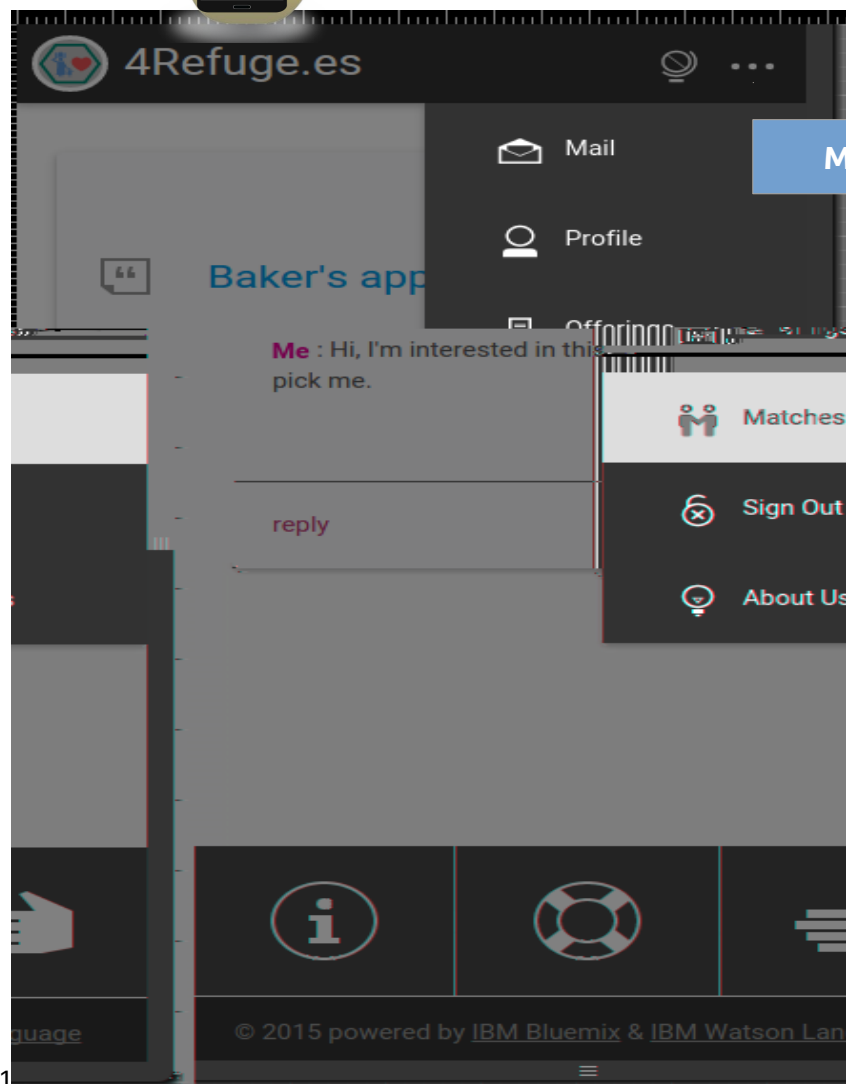

Public Profile

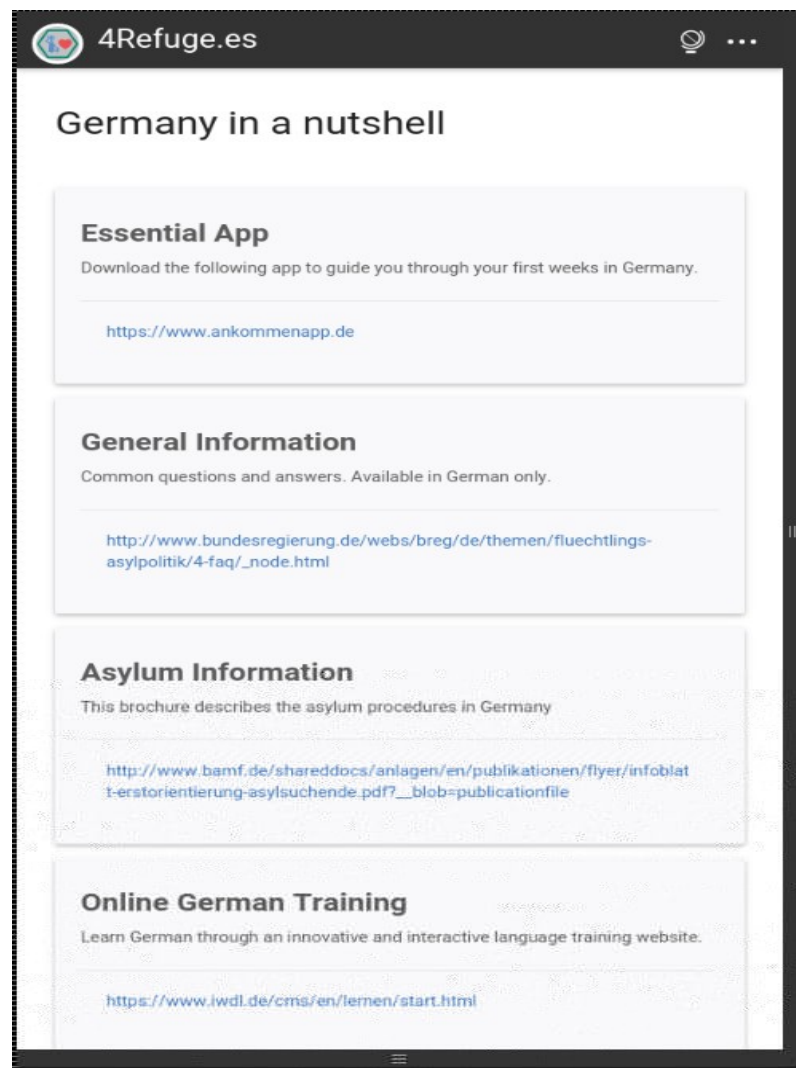

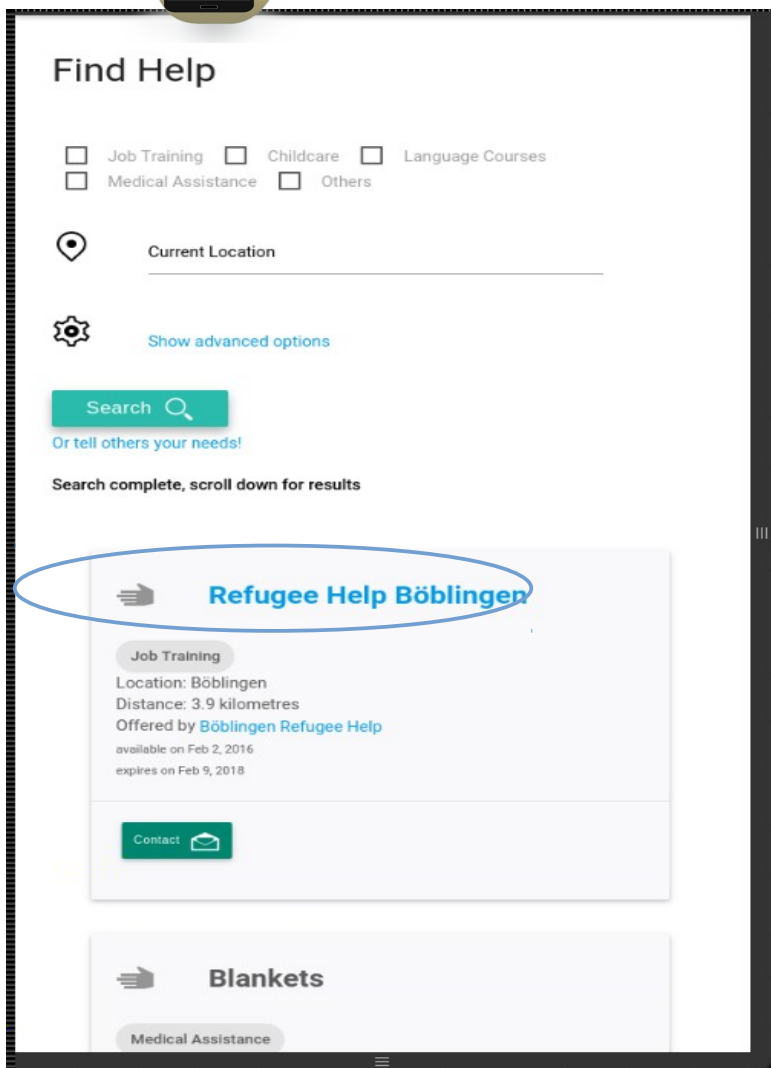

I sent Mr. Müller messages, hopefully he will respond soon.

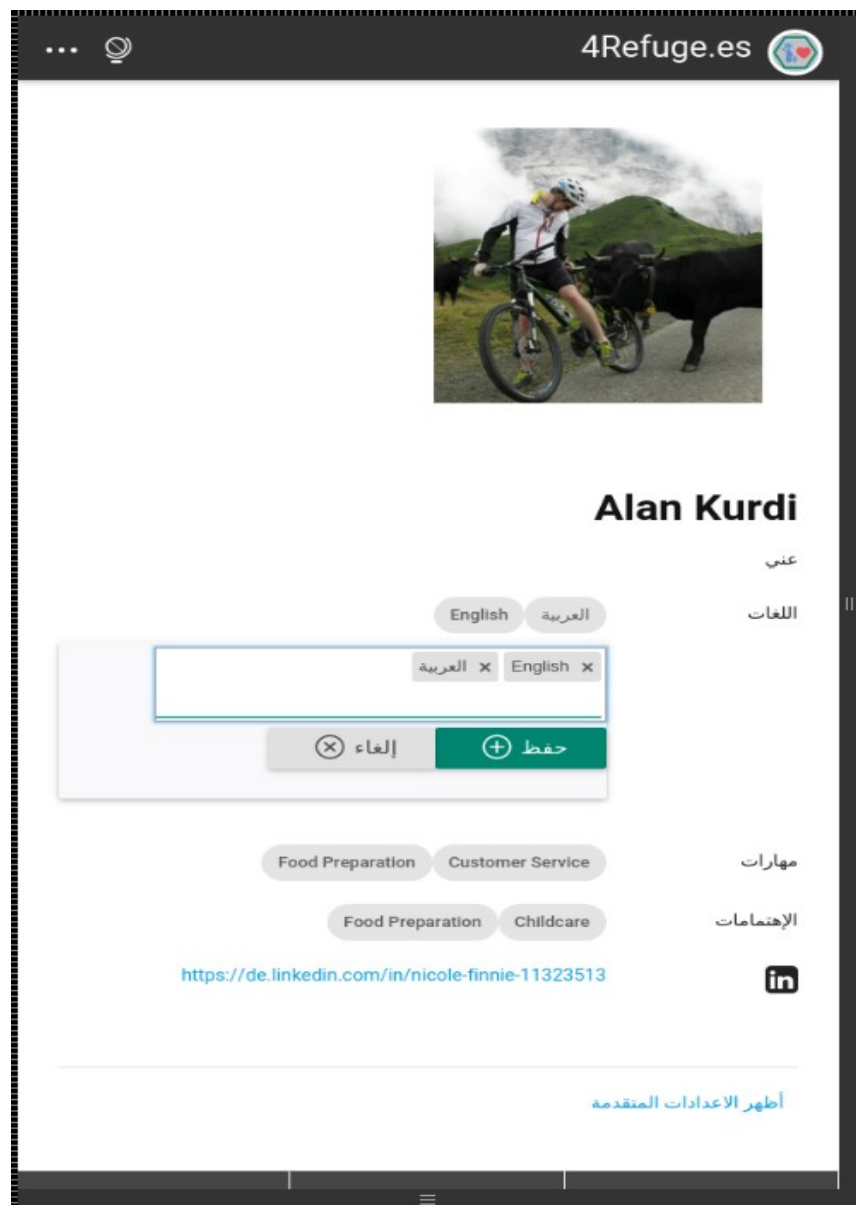

Plus, I can even find local refugee help groups nearby, as well as official information from the German government.

Ah I can manage my profile in Arabic,
It's so user-friendly for Arabic speakers.

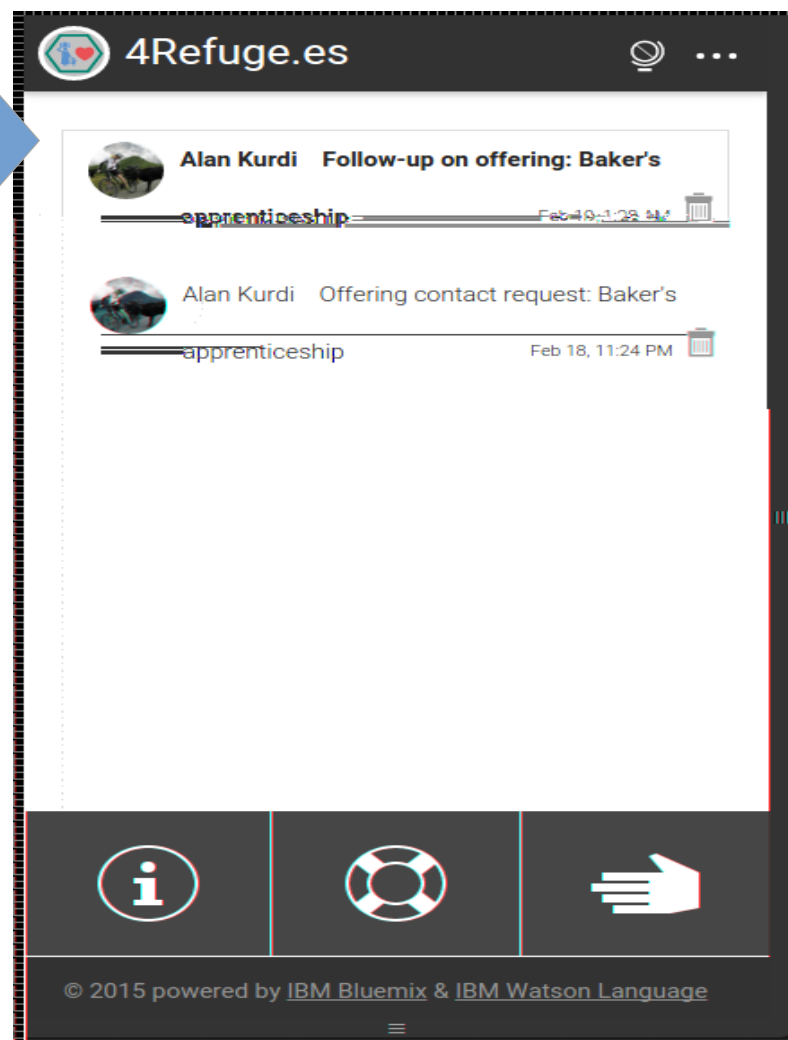

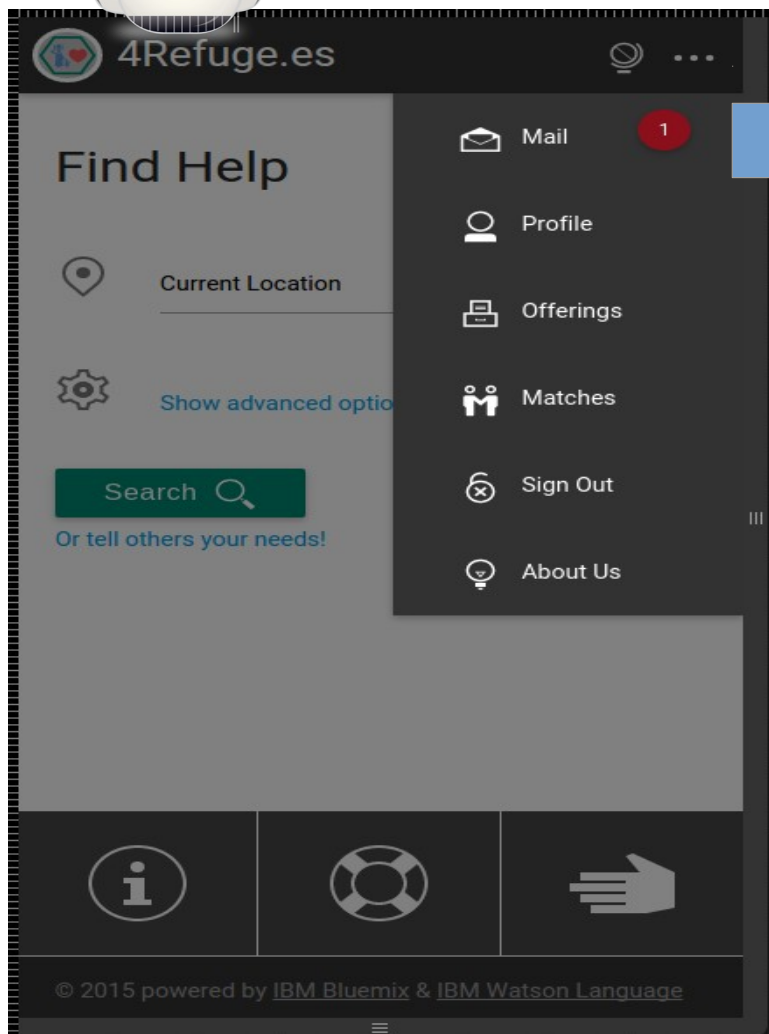

I'm going to put up a picture
where I tried to fight off a cow in Syria.

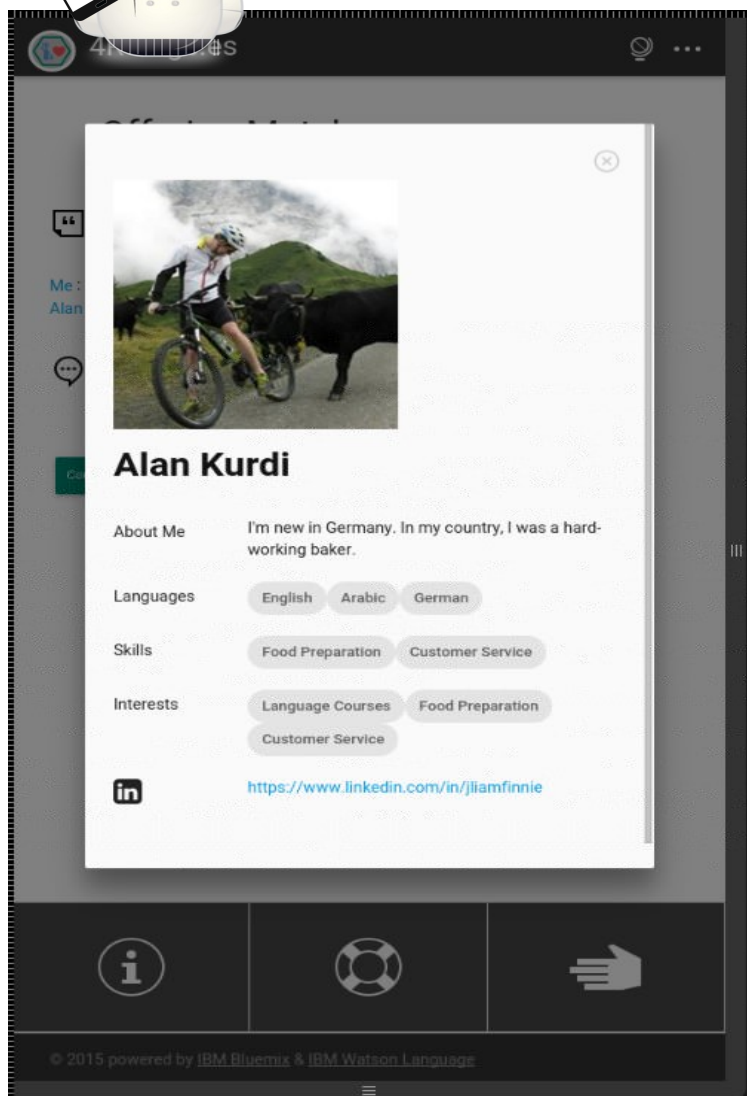

I got new emails! Mr. Kurdi is interested in this position.

InMail

From his profile, I can tell he is a hard working baker with baking skills.
I'm going to contact him.

The screenshot shows a mobile app interface for 4Refuge.es. At the top, there's a header with the app's logo and name. Below it, a profile card for Alan Kurdi is displayed. The card includes a photo of a person on a bicycle, the name 'Alan Kurdi', and a bio: 'I'm new in Germany. In my country, I was a hard-working baker.' Below the bio, there are sections for 'Languages' (English, Arabic, German), 'Skills' (Food Preparation, Customer Service), and 'Interests' (Language Courses, Food Preparation, Customer Service). At the bottom of the card, there's a LinkedIn icon and a link to 'https://www.linkedin.com/in/jliamfinnie'. The app's bottom navigation bar has three icons: a person, a lifebuoy, and a hand.

Mr. Müller responded, fantastic! I'm going to have an interview!

The best part is,
I might become a German baker soon in my new home.
With my new job, I need childcare for my 2 year-old twins.
